CONFERENCE OBJECTIVES

The year 1982 marks the beginning of the second hundred years of psychoanalysis, both as a theory of personality development and of treatment. This history of psychoanalysis has been one of theoretical formulation and reformulation, arising from changing notions of human nature and addressing the predicaments of the psychoanalytic patient, the structure of the psychoanalytic relationship, and the mutative factors in the psychoanalytic process.

Recent years have witnessed the burgeoning of theories and treatment modalities, heightening conflict and confusion as to what is, or what is not, to be considered psychoanalysis, and as to whether psychoanalysis does, or does not, make a unique contribution to the psychotherapeutic endeavor.

In this forum, we will articulate certain essential elements and values of psychoanalysis. Through a series of panels, we will address such basic questions as: Who can be a psychoanalytic patient? Who can be a psychoanalyst? How does psychoanalysis work? Where are we in its development?

Each panel will consist of the presentation of several papers and formal discussion. All panel members are graduates and/or faculty of the N.Y.U. Postdoctoral Program or of other training institutes. Informal discussion will follow.
